

"Let us not misunderstand a statement like this. We are reminded here that it is not enough to believe in God, or to have a thesis, nor is it enough to say we believe in a Supreme Being and that we recognize the Person of God. That is not the particular thing that makes us Christian... God himself has appointed Christ to be the centre, and therefore we must say with Martin Luther that we know of no other God save Jesus Christ."

D. Martyn Lloyd-Jones

"The New Testament is always at great pains to show that to be a Christian is to be entirely different from the man who is not. We cannot reiterate that too frequently. It is not a difference in degree, but in kind; it is not a difference in certain things we do in life, something quantitative, it is a qualitative difference. It is a vital one, the difference between belonging to a family and not belonging – it is a blood relationship."
